(The arena lights flicker and die. A low hum fills the air, followed by the scrape of chains. A single spotlight hits the center of the ring — and out of the fog crawls The Catasauqua Creeper, dragging a rusted coffin behind him. His voice rasps like gravel and decay.)

The Catasauqua Creeper: “You smell that? That’s fear... and rot. That’s the scent of every soul that’s stepped into my graveyard thinking they could walk out alive. In the Coffin Filler League, I don’t pin you — I bury you.”

(He tilts his head, grinning through cracked teeth.) “They call me the Creeper because I don’t rush. I stalk. I wait. I let the dread crawl up your spine until you can’t breathe. Then I strike — and when I do, you don’t get up. You get filled.”

(He slams his fist on the coffin lid, the echo ringing through the arena.) “This isn’t a league... it’s a morgue. And every match is a funeral. So lace up your boots, light your candles, and say your prayers — because once the Creeper creeps, the coffin closes.”

(He drags the coffin toward the camera, whispering with a grin.) “Rest... in... pieces.”
