TRASH TALK

Death Valley Drifter → Kamikaze:

The Drifter gives Kamikaze credit for eliminating him from the Battle Royal but makes it clear he's not upset—just waiting. He promises that when they meet one-on-one without distractions, Kamikaze will realize that tossing him out was the easy part, and the real fight is still coming.

Magnifico Astro → Sam Hain:

Astro mocks Sam Hain, saying that while Hain once sounded intimidating, he crumbled the moment Astro confronted him directly. Astro claims he didn't take Hain's pride—he simply exposed that it never existed in the first place.

Los Astros (Ultimo & Excelente Astro) → Tag Division:

Los Astros declare they are done waiting and are coming back for the IWL Tag Titles. They emphasize that this isn't just another challenge—they're coming to reclaim what's theirs and reestablish their dominance.

Kamikaze → Entire Roster / Multiple Targets:

Kamikaze brags about holding the League Title for three straight cycles, questioning the competitiveness of IWL. He takes shots at Swampe Socke, teases cashing in his briefcase on Skullfire for the IWAR World Title, and calls out Randy for the Johnny B Cup, warning everyone that his next move is inevitable—"Tick... Tick... Boom."

The Von Snapps → Destruction Crew / Tag Scene:

Alex Von Snapp calls out the Destruction Crew for running away to IWL, labeling them cowards, and vows to remind everyone who the Von Snapps are in 2026. The family doubles down, claiming superiority over all teams and trios, promising to dominate upcoming tournaments and reclaim their spot as the greatest unit in IWAR history.

Los Americanos (Hank & Buddy) → Best of the Best Tournament:

Hank and Buddy watch new teams arrive and dismiss their reputations, vowing to prove they are the greatest tag team in IWL history by winning the tournament. While Buddy focuses on victory, Hank humorously suggests they could just ambush everyone with chairs, showing their mix of confidence and chaos.

The American Dream (Ali Atari) → IWL & Himself:

Reflecting on his past as a hated figure, Atari admits he's evolving. He recognizes the need for both heroes and villains but declares he will now embody hard work and purpose. Rebranding himself as "The American Dream," he vows to elevate IWL by outworking everyone and becoming the standard for success.

Gordon Donovan & The Machines → Rival Teams (Light Humor):

In a more comedic segment, Gordon Donovan boasts about simple strength and efficiency (symbolized by his drink), while others debate refinement. The scene highlights personality differences rather than direct threats, presenting a tongue-in-cheek contrast of styles and philosophies.

Fathers Conrad & Arturo / Maltese Monster / Michigan Border Patrol (Multiple Segments):

The Fathers frame their tag title reign as a holy mission, aiming to "convert" rival teams while staying focused on key opponents. The Maltese Monster reflects on falling short but stays determined to earn a title shot through continued dominance. Meanwhile, the Michigan Border Patrol regroups after losses, acknowledging they need to refocus and prepare seriously for upcoming competition.

"The Sensational One" Scott Foley → Tournament Field:

Foley delivers a cocky promo, claiming the "Best of the Best" tournament might as well be named after him. He welcomes the competition only as a means to further validate his greatness.

Swampe Socke Jr. & StarSocke Sr. → T.I.B. / Chaos Segment:

In a chaotic, comedic storyline, the Sockes are captured by the Thread Investigation Bureau while searching for Starlyte. After resisting arrest, they're detained and confronted with a bizarre legal challenge involving a wrestling match, continuing their absurd, unpredictable narrative.

Kevin Hurley ("The Face") → Timmy Two-Face:

Hurley calls out Timmy Two-Face's ego, explaining that Timmy abandoned responsibility when things didn't go his way. He positions himself as the pure, positive figure in contrast and challenges Timmy to embrace being the villain by taking him on directly.

Manny Nuff → Himself / Redemption Arc:

Manny's segment is more inspirational than antagonistic, recounting a lifetime of being doubted and proving people wrong. After betrayal and setbacks, he stands alone entering the tournament, driven by heart and resilience, ready to define himself without relying on anyone else.

SAM HAIN: So Magnifico Astro is the only one brave enough to step out from the shadows and answer my call. You will have to forgive me. My focus was elsewhere and I didn't even notice you standing there and I will admit I should have noticed you considering you are the one who snatched the wrestler of the year trophy from my hands before I got my hands fully around it and that is a sting that left a mark on my ego. So what do you propose Astro? Best of 3, Best of 5, A single Match at the next PPV? I will let you pick the match, and even the time and place. You let me know what you want and I will make it happen.

“This is hardly worth fighting for, but it’s the petty little doodoo that I can’t ignore.” -Sick Puppies.

I mean, to be fair, I’ve tried pretty hard. Sure, grading on the low-IQ ragebait curve that has been instituted by the self-proclaimed ruler of the game (and I’m sure approved during his last visit to the Bruening family retreat), the fact that I’ve responded at all means I’ve already lost; but I figure that since this person seems to do two things nonstop - Talk about me, and lie - I figured this was as good of a time as any to provide some context to the general IWA public, who’s likely growing increasingly confused as to why the only thing that the “top player” in the game can talk about non-stop is Caleb Crowdad. I mean, it’s been in every bulletin, Dungeon post and (by his own admission) even some group chats since last fall. For someone with so much on his plate, and the undoubted demands that being #1 ranked in the IWA must have on someone (can’t even begin to fathom the media attention and hoards of adoring fans every time you try to go out in public), the amount of time that the guy whose name I can’t use (because he’ll cry to “Kimberly” for the 657th time) can still find to obsess over me is truly remarkable. I don’t know how he’s been able to do it without hiring some sort of data collecting crew, really. One thing I can say with great certainty: The Heeliest Heel in the History of Heeldom has spent WAY more time concerning himself with what I’m doing in the IWA than I have. I have some theories on why that is, but they’ll get censored. I’ll just say this; true stuff doesn’t seem to get censored in our society these days. “Just sayin.”

There I go with my ranting again. I was told not to do that; and we all know that the reason we all pay to play this game is to do it exactly as we are told by other people that are also paying to play the game. Objectively, it’s kinda weird that I can’t do two pages one time (or “three” if you’re a liar who’s trying to exaggerate to look cool in front of everyone and use a “nobody” for clout) but this can go on for what? 4 or 5 cycles now that he has been going on about me in every single bulletin? Yet when I reply, I’m taking it too seriously. No one on this planet, including my own family, seemingly thinks about me as much as this guy does. It’d be flattering if he weren’t so creepy. The guy who spends his life concerned about how he’s perceived in an imaginary wrestling game is lecturing others on “taking it too seriously,” when their attempts to cope with a midlife crisis by trying to be a high profile cyber bully don’t go the way they had planned. “Ltm.”

But I digress. I did say in the opening paragraph that I was going to explain why this is happening, but it’s pretty clear that I don’t know. I keep reading a lot of wildly untrue things about my IWA history, though. Now to be clear, this section isn’t for the person who is the topic of this little blurb. This is just information; we know that those that set the narrative are never interested in information, unless it is cherry picked and curated to fit their narrative.

One accusation that is true: I was never relevant in the glory days of the game. I had 9 wrestlers and virtually no internet from 99-01. One World Title was my lone report appearance, and I thought the IWA Report was a different universe for sure. Had zero clue how to actually do a tag strat.

I played again with a similar roster in 04-05. Left the game behind for what I thought was going to be for good. Had you told me 20 years ago that I'd be a flooding super villain, I would have said "Wow, I can't believe that game is still around."

I got the multi itch when I randomly popped back up in 2012. Don't remember who put the idea in my head, but I flooded all the way out to like 25 and started doing that mean nasty evil teaming thing with Erik Davis, then later Geoff Silva. Six-man only; I hit one by accident then I got put in charge. I saw the systems floating around, but saying that I understood them at that time would be a lie, and lying is one area where I'm sure I can't compete with these folks.

I can't stay active for more than two years (usually spread out over 3 calendar years; so you'll be rid of me by next summer, just hang in there), so that fizzled out.

Then 2019-21; flood time, won a bunch of stuff, it was cool. It was in that time that "MOTYgate" occurred, as it has been misquoted and misrepresented roughly 463 times in the past six months. To be clear, the only comment I've ever made about "Manager of the Year" was something to the effect of "I missed #1 by a handful of points the one year I was fully active, and I didn't do any ladies leagues, so in my mind I was #1". I'm genuinely sorry that something that happened in my mind 6 years ago is still bothering people who weren't active in the game at that time to this day. I will take it back and admit that I was #2 the one year that I was fully active as an adult. The numbers don't lie; just the people that control the numbers.

By fall of 21 it fizzled out and I mostly forgot about the game (as well as taking years off of social media, which was amazing, btw) until last spring (it's always the spring, man) when I had one of those nights and thought it would be fun to mess around with a little bit again. It was supposed to be 40-50 max, but my need for something constant eventually won out, and things got carried away. That brings us to today.

That little bit of time that I've spent in this game, relatively speaking, puts me, I've been told, in the top 20 all-time. I completely missed the bulk rate era, (does seem like I would have had a real field day there); so I was as stunned as anyone to find out it was that high.

Why am I saying all this? Well for starters, I have to do four pages now, as I tend to become progressively more obstinate when people with no authority try to tell me what to do. Don't get mad at me, I practically begged the person to leave me alone, but they keep creating new accounts and talking about me in every single bulletin. I don't like this either; but I also promised that I would send something to get those five free ASL matches. I'm done entertaining this childishness for free. But I'm also hoping that we can find my original sin here, cuz darn it now I'm invested. The most recent explanation for the obsession is to expose to the IWA world that I'm "overrated." I have a cascading series of queries about this particular charge. I don't think it's statistically accurate, but that is extraordinarily subjective and certainly not an argument worth having. I question the premise all together: overrated by whom? I've never heard anyone say that I was any good at this, up to and including me - so whether I am or not, is it so pressing that we have been going on about it for 8 months or whatever it is now? Seems far more likely that people are just desperate for anything they can reach for that they hope might stick. If I had ever bragged to a level anywhere above very humbly about anything, ever, I might believe it; but it's pretty easy to see that this goes beyond that. Anyone still reading by now or who has been remotely invested in this knows that you haven't been obsessing over me for months on end simply so you can debunk a claim that absolutely no one is making. If you truly just thought this was about "exposing me as overrated," it would have been done with after like at least the 3rd time that I said, "maybe. This isn't that serious, I'm not particularly interested in continuing this." Did that happen? Not even close. I blocked the troll. You know, walk away. Be the bigger person, etc. So he goes to another account. Block that one. Then an alias. Then anonymous posts. You get the idea. I'm not even fighting the allegations, yet everything out of this person's mouth continues to be about them. I am literally not allowed to play this game UNLESS I care about the things they care about, and see it the same way, or I'm going to be harassed until I agree to quit. What a tremendous ambassador for the game; I can see why Willowick put him in charge.

But of course the subject knows all of this and simply doesn't care. All that was for the masses and to fill the quota I gave myself (see, only fighting my own expectations again). Everyone knows the blatant and repeated hypocrisy being spewed, and all of us know there is a special crowd of people within the IWA that you simply can't talk to, for reasons that need not be explained. But seeing that behavior from "the top," really does give you that "what am I doing with my life is this is who I'm doing it with feeling," and I get real self-conscious. I understand the power of association; what if I end up like these people?

Dang man, I forgot I was writing this and now I just have a few minutes to finish it before work. Sucks too cuz this is it; I'm just gonna keep blocking every new account this idiot makes and keep teaming with absolutely everyone. There's nothing that he has the courage to do that is going to stop me, so I guess the multi beatings will continue until I see fit. Here's the thing, though; anyone reading this can do the same thing, so I'm not actually taking from anyone. I'm spreading the love, and that's what miserable people like this can't stand. Ya see, there is absolutely no way that someone with a normal, healthy life outside of this game could possibly spend as much time as this person spends consumed by their standing in it. This dude likely spends more time on the extra stuff in the game than any of the rest of us spend total. I'm not saying it isn't helpful to some, but it clearly isn't healthy.

The good news is, none of this will sway That Guy in the slightest. And thank whatever celestial being he tells us that we must draw comfort from for that. One thing we learn from the internet is that when someone hates you, you should often consider the source and see if this is a backhanded compliment. Sure, there is the chance that he is threatened by me. Looking at the numbers and trying to ask myself, "How would I feel if this were the most important thing in my world," I could see that as a much more likely explanation than any that have been given thus far.

I will give him credit on his rage bait though (again, me responding proves he's already won. Only one person is allowed to speak and control the narrative, and if you defend yourself it's a sign of fragility. It's Cable News Boomer logic, now available in your mailbox), playing the victim in every Iron league did get me to vow to send 4 pages. "I was just trying to have fun, why do you have to make it personal?" Gtfooh. You know that it has only been personal on your end, and I just spent 3 pages explaining why, so I'm not going to bother again. BBB might have 2 brain cells left that haven't been battered by LE, cellmates or some chick named Crystal, but at least he can be honest about his feelings and quit trying to act like it's about some greater cause or attempting to lecture us from a perceived moral high ground. Some come on out and just be honest about it so we can communicate about it like adults.

Forgot who I was talking to for a second. (Let's do 5 pages; one for each free ASL match. Look, the host did an ad read)

In summation: Thank you for your opinion. What on Earth do I need to do to get you to stop sharing it? I do not value it as I do not value the source. You are not someone whom I respect. I do not find you to have any redeeming qualities. The fact that you have to have so many accounts to shield yourself from the fact that you can't control yourself over a fantasy wrestling game is deeply disturbing, and I do not feel spiritually well about someone like you taking such an interest in me. You are creepy as hell, insecure, phony, and just seem like you get way too much use out of that little chair in the hotel and I'm just not about it. I would be thrilled to no end if you took your opinion and put it in that spot where Your Leader touches you and tells you that it's prettier and smells better than everyone else's. I don't get what you're trying to do, but stop using me to try to do it. I know you're getting Steven Richards Right To Censor heat, but there has to be something better for you to do. I'm not scared of waking up to you PPFing me into a coma, but I am starting to worry about waking up to my own sock in my mouth so you can unveil a painting of me that you've done.

But my best theory is that you probably have a humiliation kink and enjoy being spitroasted by half a dozen members of the IWA community every time you post from one of your 42 aliases, so for that reason alone this has to be the end of the matter on my end. I learned a long time ago that you don't do fetish play for free on the internet. I know my worth! So I'm getting my 5 free matches or I'm not doing this bull. I will send it to 36 other leagues, though, because nothing on this planet is more important to me than having my opinions heard by absolutely everyone in the IWA.

“Mad Dog” Tommy Zulu

IWA Network cameras travel into the conference room inside of the luxurious estate of the Arrogant Empire where one of the greatest managers in IWA history, Tommy Zulu, is seated for a 1-1 interview with IWA reporter, Stephanie Gallows.

GALLOWS: “Ladies and gentlemen, welcome. Thank you for joining us for this exclusive breaking interview. I’m here with the reigning IWA points champion, Tommy Zulu.”

GALLOWS: “Mr. Zulu, thank you for joining me here and congratulations on a great start to 2026. You’ve managed to make this year eventful so far, where is this spark of renewed energy coming from?”

ZULU: “Thanks for having me, Steph. Ya know, 2026 has been a blast so far and you’re not wrong - there’s been a lot of renewed energy and I think the game’s really been feeling that in a good and bad way. As for where it’s coming from.... people may not want to hear it, but it’s the rest of this game that did it, really. A couple of the guys were talking about this could be the last year for them and so they wanted to do something a little different. That’s when we joined the Empire. We came out and had just a little fun with it, but it was really the other players - the other stables - the way they treated us and the amount of hypocrisy they’ve come at us with, that’s what turned a little spark of energy into this full-blown heatwave we’re experiencing.”

GALLOWS: “When you say ‘the boys’, I’m assuming that’s Steve Deane and Mike Carver?”

GALLOWS: “You mentioned the hypocrisy of the boards. What are some examples?”

ZULU: “The first example came heading right into the new year. I posted an anonymous poll asking whether players would be in favor of realigning the bulletin cycles to match the IWA Report cycle. The poll was 92% in favor of the change with only two people expressing opposition. As soon as I was credited with making the recommendation, though, the boards lost their minds and had all sorts of nasty things to say about me.”

ZULU: “Next came the announcement that we joined AE. After having gone out of our way to make a cordial departure from EDGE, everything was fine.... until they saw our names listed on the AE roster. More nasty things to say about me.... and, it was just me, by the way. There’s three other managers that were part of EDGE in 2025 that are with the Empire, but nobody’s had a thing to say about them. Just me. They made me the villain. Which is ironic, because when I referred to AE as being the premier heel stable in the game, I got an earful about how I’m not a heel.... and, they almost said it in a way so as to suggest that me carrying a heel status would be unfathomable. It’s like they forgot all about those years that I was winning awards for Most Hated and for Best Board Presence at the same time - in an era where the game still had players who knew how to play it. So, I’ve given them the heel version of ~TZ~ and now they’re complaining about it.”

ZULU: “And, then there’s been other stuff, too. There’s been players in SOS complaining about our roster size even though our roster was very similar to what they had at this time last year. Blatant hypocrisy right there. And, guys from major stables trying to attack me for running multi’s the same way that other guys in their own stable do. It’s been interesting, Steph.... but, as they say, heavy is the head who wears the crown.”

GALLOWS: "You mentioned your heel status and the debate that has surrounded it. You referenced years prior when you received Dungeon Awards for Best Board Presence and Biggest Heel. There have been some recent counter-arguments made by players pointing out that Mark Duchaine has won (or tied for) the award for Biggest Heel in each of the past three-years. Does it stand to reason that this would put Mark on the same level as you, if not higher?"

ZULU: "First off, Steph - there is no debate. If there's anything you can take the bank from 2026, it's that Tommy Zulu has turned the game upside down and taken on the role of the Biggest Heel this game has seen in close to a decade."

GALLOWS: "How do you explain Mark's three consecutive years of receiving the vote for that award?"

ZULU: "There's been a bit of a trend with the awards over the past few years in that a lot of the categories have developed into more of a popularity contest than an actual merit-based achievement as a lot of managers - and, some groups in particular - have really taken a Homer approach to casting their ballots. Here's a little insight as to how this particular award functions: First, a lot of players have submitted nominations for this category based on who they feel like is the biggest running joke. Then, without giving it any thought, a bunch of COT players vote for Mark because he's their buddy. It's hardly the achievement that he thinks it is."

GALLOWS: "So, then it sounds like you don't really think Mark is on your level when it comes to being a heel?"

ZULU: "It's not even close, Steph. I mean, the guy ended 2025 campaigning to be nominated for Biggest Heel and Most Popular - that kinda tells you what you need to know. But, even if Mark had the ingenuity to do what I do, he still doesn't have the clout to pull it off - and, believe me, the clout is a key ingredient. Anyone that doesn't understand that has no real business trying to be involved in this conversation. It's fine, though. This is about the execution, not the award anyway."

GALLOWS: "Speaking of the game having lowered its standards, you've been very vocal about your stance on interstable teaming. Why have you become so passionate about this topic?"

ZULU: "I have a confession to make, Stephanie.... I'm not nearly as passionate about this as it's been made out to be. I do think it's dumb, but it's also not anything I've lost any sleep over. But, a lot of these guys - they let down their guard and played right into my hands by letting me know how much my opinion bothered them."

GALLOWS: "Fair enough. All the same, though, what makes it dumb?"

ZULU: "I think you have to stop and really ask yourself what the purpose is for an IWA stable? I mean, really - what actual purpose does it serve? It doesn't fit at all into the mold of professional wrestling. If you look at the NWO, which was the largest faction in wrestling history, you had probably around 20 or 25 wrestlers at any given time and between 60 to 80 in total throughout the life of the stable. Now, you look at an IWA stable and you've got anywhere between 400 to 1200.... so, obviously these big stables aren't sharing stable initials for the fantasy wrestling aspect of it, right?"

ZULU: "Growing up in this game, the stable initials were a huge part of what created 'the game within the game' and that really is a large part of what's made the IWA successful over the years - and, that's still true today. Sure, there's league networks like IWAR that have helped shift pockets of the IWA towards being an actual fantasy wrestling game, but you can't ignore the power of things like the points race and message board drama the help to keep that engine powered."

ZULU: "And, so to me, this is really the sole purpose of these big stables. There's a few of them out there and if you're in one, that's where you've chosen to put yourself in community for the time being. Those are the people that you're going to war with and there should be a certain pride that comes with that. The kind of pride that says 'these are my people and we're going to beat you at this game.' You don't see that anymore, though. These guys - they don't play the fantasy wrestling aspect of the game, they get bent of shape if say anything negative about them on a message board, and they scoff at the idea that the game should even hold a competitive environment. Literally, all they want to do is send in numbers on a match sheet to lock-in their six-man titles and hope they have a shot at a major. That's it. Well, that's what they want you to think at least. But, at the end of the day, my real problem with interstable teaming is that it's just such an adequate reflection of the lack of stable pride and lack of competitive spirit that this game has taken on in recent years."

GALLOWS: "When did you see this shift start to happen?"

ZULU: "I wasn't really around for it, to be honest. When I returned at the end of 2020, this was sort of the game that I came back to. The best I can tell is that the game hit a bit of a dark age when there were no roster limits and things really spun out of control. Managers responded by oversharing their multi-man strategy systems and doing a lot of extra teaming in an effort to combat the big rosters. I don't think that was the wrong response at all, but then they kept doing it. It's like when the Allied Powers pushed back Germany, but then Russia just decided to keep all the land. Unfortunately, guys like Mike Cook had become the new 'voice' of the game at the time and there was nobody willing to stand up and tell them how dumb this was. There wasn't anybody to bring some sensibility back to the game."

ZULU: "See, teaming in general has already gotten out of hand. It's just a way for everyone to circumvent the roster caps and use less roster to share in the spoils at full points value. It's bad enough that we do this already. But, then to take even more advantage of it by having to team with everyone outside of your stable.... I dunno, it just adds to the cheapness while diluting stable pride even more. If you wanna team with someone so badly, then either join their stable or recruit them into yours. It's not complicated."

GALLOWS: "Why the interest in Caleb Crowdad?"

ZULU: "I'm far less interested than I've been made out to be. He's just overrated and one of the chief offenders of what's wrong with the game is all."

GALLOWS: "That takes care of my questions. I understand, though, that you had something of your own that you wanted to share?"

ZULU: "Yes, as a matter of fact, I do. I stated earlier that the boys and I wanted to go on an epic adventure in 2026 and that led us to the Arrogant Empire. Our main goal - my main goal - was for us to win Stable of the Year together. I had also mentioned to several people leading into the year that I had planned on several roster cuts in '26, but first I wanted to contribute towards positioning AE for the top spot. Well, here we are a little more a quarter of the way through the year. We've already taken back the boards. We've already won the illustrious StableCade crown. And, we're sitting in the driver's seat well on our way to capturing another points title for the Empire - despite the adversity we've had to overcome as the rest of the game has attempted to stack the deck against us. And, so now that I believe I've served my duties, the previously mentioned roster cuts are now underway. Within the next two-cycles, I should be down to 100 wrestlers and on my way to significantly less by the end of the year! Of course, I've seen a lot of shenanigans around here lately.... so, before any of these stables do anything stupid in an effort to try and take us down for a cheap win, they should definitely ask themselves whether whatever trick they have up their sleeve is going to be better than me adding back another 100+ wrestlers."

GALLOWS: "Wow! That's major news! Especially.... I have to ask.... you're the defending 2025 points champion and you're currently once again the #1 ranked manager overall. Is that really something that you can just up and walk away from?"

ZULU: "Look at the resume, Steph - I've done just about everything there is to do in the IWA. Could I put it in auto-pilot and coast my way to another points championship? Of course I can and I've got the history to back that up. But, it's time for me to step aside give these other guys a shot at the title.... and, by "title", I do mean the 2026 title. Because, I think there's one thing that has been established without a shadow of a doubt..... Tommy Zulu - the man that they all love to hate - has now cemented his legacy as the IWA's "Forever Champion." They don't have to like it, but these chumps are gonna have to learn to live with it because it's a title that they can never take away. Just sayin'."

And, with that, the scene begins to fade away with Stephanie Gallows thanking him for his time. As the screen fades to black, centered in big gold letters is:

"the Forever Champ"
Tommy Zulu

From The Marshlands of Swampe Socke, Jr.

3/22/2026

The cell smelled like mildew and old lint. Swampe Socke Jr. rubbed his fuzzy brow. StarSocke Sr. paced, trying to remember if he'd eaten a Twinkie that morning.

They were told to wrestle Perry Legal for their freedom. The match was ridiculous and messy. Swampe Socke Jr. finished it with his Slammin' Salmon while shouting, "Blah!" StarSocke Sr. kept the crowd distracted with loud, silly taunts. TOE-RIFFIC!!! Midway through, Perry Legal slammed the mat and a trapdoor opened, spraying confetti and revealing a tiny Twinkie-shaped device.

The device projected a holographic map with a pulsing star marking Starlyte's last shimmer. Agent Sweater's sweater came loose enough to show a Loom Liberation League patch. Perry Legal pulled out a tiny gavel that doubled as a grappling hook and led them through vents past a guard knitting a sweater for a cactus.

The map took them to the Loom Caverns, where lost socks and forgotten buttons hummed. In the center they found Starlyte asleep in a cradle of yarn. Swampe Socke Jr. bit through a rope, StarSocke Sr. shoved aside a curtain of threads, and together they freed Starlyte. Starlyte blinked awake and sprinkled starlight like lint.

Outside, mismatched socks and a proud cactus in a tiny sweater cheered. The Twinkie device buzzed again and a new, colder dot appeared on the map. Swampe Socke Jr. grinned and muttered, "That's a bunch of blah." StarSocke Sr. straightened up. Perry Legal polished his gavel. The search wasn't over.

StarSocke Sr: Where are my Twinkies???

Starlyte: Thanks team! His visor lit up with data: TV Champion Active. League and Tag Champs Next.
