IWA SUPERFRIENDS MAGAZINE

Feature Article: “Doctor’s Orders – Adapt or Get Left Behind”

By Staff Writer – Ringside Correspondent

Location: Private Superfriends Media Pavilion

Event: Closed-Door Press Conference (with very loud “outside the fence” participation)

There are press conferences...

...and then there are Doctor Pain press conferences.

Set against the backdrop of the exclusive Superfriends compound — equal parts championship lounge and tactical war room — Doctor Pain Mark Duchaine stepped to the podium this week to address the hottest topic in the IWA:

Interstable teaming.

And as expected, he didn’t just address it — he diagnosed it.

□ “The Loudest Voices... Usually the Weakest Arguments”

Doctor Pain opened with a slow scan of the room, a smirk forming before he even touched the microphone.

“You know what I love about this whole situation?” he began.

“The biggest Karens in this business — the loudest complainers — are the same ones using the most strategies behind the scenes.”

The room reacted immediately. A few chuckles. A few uncomfortable shifts.

Doctor Pain continued.

“They want to act like they’re defending the integrity of the game... like they’re the guardians of some sacred code. But the second you look at their playbook?

Alliances. Backups. Depth charts. Contingency plans.

They’re not purists... they’re just mad someone else is playing the game better.”

□ Strategy vs. Selective Outrage

According to Doctor Pain, the argument against interstable teaming isn’t about fairness — it’s about control.

“If you’ve been stacking your advantages for years, you don’t want the rules to change. You don’t want someone like me coming in and showing how efficient it can be when you actually think things through.”

He paused, leaning slightly into the mic.

“This isn’t about right and wrong.

It’s about who understands the system... and who’s still pretending it hasn’t evolved.”

□ A Not-So-Subtle Shot

Without naming names directly, Doctor Pain took aim at one particular critic — someone he described as both vocal and self-proclaimed elite.

“One of these Karens thinks he’s the GOAT,” Pain said with a laugh.

“But what’s he really known for?”

He let the silence hang just long enough.

“Flooding the board to grab multi-man titles...
and getting roasted every other week in the IWA Dungeon.”

A few audible reactions rippled through the media section — some laughter, some groans.

“That’s not dominance,” Pain added.

“That’s quantity over quality... and hoping nobody notices.”

□ The Diagnosis

Doctor Pain then delivered what he called his “final assessment” of the situation:

“Interstable teaming isn’t a loophole.

It’s not cheating.

It’s not ruining the game.”

He tapped the podium twice.

“And if your strategy can’t keep up with it?

That’s not my problem.”

□ The Bombshell Announcement

Just when it seemed like the press conference was winding down, Doctor Pain dropped the headline that will define the upcoming cycle.

He straightened his coat. Adjusted his stethoscope.

And smiled.

“So let’s go ahead and make this official...”

The room leaned in.

“This month?”

“I’ll be teaming with Keith Maple...
and Frank Belcher.”

The reaction was immediate — murmurs, raised eyebrows, phones coming out.

Doctor Pain raised a hand, silencing the noise.

“And there’s not a thing the Forever Karen can do about it.”

□ Final Word

As he stepped away from the podium, Doctor Pain left the room with one last line — equal parts warning and promise:

“You can complain about it...

you can write about it...

you can cry about it...”

He paused at the exit.

“Or you can adapt.”

“Because while you’re busy arguing...
