Masked Fren

Greetings my Masked Fren. Your 501 was promised to you 3000 years ago don't let them tell you otherwise. And if they do then well, they are just anti501ites. Congrats on the Random Number Generator Title. In all my time I've only ever won that thing once. Once. Maybe we should call it the Pull Tab Title. Pull Tabs? Well, it's an Ohio thing I guess. Your kids are gonna love it during the next lockdown that's coming. It's Rainbet without the Burger King Hat Gyt Girl.

Were all your Stablecade entries included? Uhhhhhhh no. They weren't Linda. 2 of the 4 I entered not played. I predicted that one. The comedy of errors continues. Do I have to add up all my strategies now to make sure everything was entered correctly? Did all my matches get played? Did I get 19 bottom matches instead of 20? I mean hold 45-46 31-33 is easy to fat finger enter it wrong. Damn. At this point I'll just open the bulletins the Sunday before the next cycle is due. This whole Tony from Goodwill experiment entering data just isn't working out. Sidenote: Ever seen a hot chick working at Goodwill? I have like where did it all go wrong to wind up having to peddle used clothes to the people that need them?

But you know good employees are hard to find. I know Lake County and it's overrun by Hispanics. They can't read or speak Eeeeenglish (Shout out to you Medved) until you beat it out of them so I guess computers are out of the question. The labor pool up that way isn't much better than Glenn Della Guzman's people that can't read a road sign hauling a truckload of lettuce so some fat neck in Massachusetts can stock organic vegetables for a living. But hey Masked Fren they read this and apparently, we are getting reparations. My Green Gender Equity Card I got on ebay from Canada I guess has value. Congrats on your refund. Not only am I the King of Cades.....

I am the Martin Luther King Jr. of the Cade of Stables. Freeing my Play By Mail (or PDF) Frens. I digress....Ohhhhhhhh Stablecade.....

What I didn't predict about the Cade of Stables was the Bologna King of Wilford Brimley Holler to stop gooning to Bob Huggins and Major Harris and blow up the Cade of Stables. The silly font stable won and I was not honored this year as a hanger-onner. No swinging from Calvin 'Don't Call Me Dan' Harrell's sack this year.

Shout out to IWA Play Your Way in the WDL. Why did I read the WDL? Because I'm a dabbler. But that was funny. Now do the IWA Mount Rushmore Of People With Disabilities.....

Ahhhhhhh yes the boards are great place for community. That is until you start quoting Donald Trump, talking about pretty girls that may not have been ripe on the vine and posting Infowars links. Then, Then we need to burn the community to the ground. RIP IWA Dungeon. There's no room for heels because.....

SHANE HELMS MIGHT COME AROUND AND WANNA CHECK OUT MY PICTURES IN THE BULLY'S

If I missed being mean to you this NDL-A-Bama Fireside Chat I apologize. I tried to get you all in even if it's veiled.

Our next False Flag is around the corner.

Thank your daddy Netanyahu kids.....

DEAR ARROGANT DIARY

EPISODE 4

Tommy Zulu's personal diary had supposedly been stolen and circulated through IWA media outlets everywhere.

The segment was such a hit that the IWA Network contacted Zulu and contracted him to conduct a special mini-series to occur over the next couple of cycles.

The mini-series will contain more of Zulu's darkest inner-thoughts regarding the game and his peers. Part of his contract, however, requires him to keep the majority of his thoughts contained to within these pages, thereby limiting his ability to provide thorough responses on "the boards."

Have a read and see what "the Mad Dog" has to say that has everyone talking.

DEAR ARROGANT DIARY,

There is so much that's happened since the last time I confided in you. So many thoughts bouncing around in my head that need to find their way to paper. Where to begin....

About a month or so ago, I noticed some bulletin comments from BURN that were directed at Æ. My initial thought was one of joy that an unexpected party had decided to participate in this bit of an IWA renaissance. As I contemplated my response, however, I really didn't know what to say given that this was the #7 stable in the IWA trying to come after the #1 stable. Perhaps it may have come across as a more worthwhile cause if their top manager had actually deemed them worthy of receiving his full attention and, consequently, his points. But, alas, if he doesn't take them seriously, then how can I? As it is, BURN has relegated itself to being the top sub-stable in the game and nothing more. All that wasted potential. What a shame....

So, then, let me move along to some thoughts that are much more deserving of my attention and what else should have the focus of my attention if not the IWA-wide superslash that has formed this year with the intention of trying to overcome the juggernaut that is the Arrogant Empire.... I mean, it's either a blatant attempt to try and overcome us or it's a complete and utter disregard for respectable game play. Let me try conveying my thoughts here with a bit of a "nicer" tone and see if anything here resonates.

If, in fact, what's happening here is an attempt at trying to compete with the Empire, then we should actually be thanking them - because no matter how this year turns out, we've already won. It's either required 75% of the IWA working against us to take us down or we defied the odds and overcame 75% of the IWA working together. Either one of those is amusing to me.

If it's anything else, then the way that I see it - the way that many of us see it - is that the game is now being played with no respect at all for stable legacies or the tradition of the game. No respect for tradition and a complete avoidance of a competitive environment.

It truly saddens me that this is what's become of EDGE. Even more so, I find it a bit odd and frustrating that I seem to care more about EDGE's legacy than the guys that are still in the stable. To me, this is the saddest state that I've seen EDGE succumb to in about 25-years. It's not about talent - because the talent's still there. It's about a lack of vision and direction. It really doesn't even matter who they bring back at this point. They can go and get Akers or Guzman, but it doesn't matter because - again - this isn't an issue about talent. Unless Guz is going to walk in, take the reigns, give this stable direction and instill some self-respect, then this version of EDGE isn't even a shell of its former-self.

CONTINUED....

Not too long ago, Rich Reilly made a comment that he's been leading the stable for several years. That was interesting to me. During the two years I was there, not once did I ever see him attempting to give vision for where the group was going. We weren't getting much of that from Hanni, either, but to be fair he was checked-out of the game for the majority of my time. If anything, the only vision that existed was being berthed from me. Perhaps that's why when Brad was leaving he came to me under the misunderstanding that he thought I'd become EDGE's leader. Interesting.

Even if I forget all about my two years in EDGE, this is what else I find interesting. I looked more closely at Rich's teaming habits this cycle. After he already stated a multi-man sweep in Iron, he still proceeded anyway to team with members of COT and SOS in Steel. There's so many things wrong with that....

First, a true competitor doesn't make sacrifices to help the competition. And, no matter how you look at it, that's helping the competition. Of course both stables are likely to hit their multi's anyway. However, the longer you keep them working for it, the less singles strategies they have to use in the interim. Anybody with even half of a strategic mind would understand that.

Second, if I'm Rich's stablemate, once he's wrapped up his multis (and, ours as it were), where would I rather him use those 12 extra strategies in Steel? To take shots at singles titles that would benefit the stable? Or, to team with other stables to win more multi's that we don't need? The answer to that is painfully obvious and not one that a true stable leader should ever force his 'mates to have to answer.

End of the day, I know how this will come across to Rich when he reads it.... he'll assume that I'm just talking trash and trying to play "heel." That's nonsense. If he's going to handle the reigns of a stable that remains near and dear to my heart, then I simply want him to behave and play the game in a way that the stable deserves.

Meanwhile, some managers have attempted to deflect this situation back to my stablemate, Michael Eaves..... this is something I've already addressed, but I'll put it here again anyway. Mike already knows I don't love the fact that he teams with Mark (COT) and Keith (VIRUS), but I also don't have a problem with it as it's very plain to see that this is a very different situation. These three guys have been teaming together for as long as I can remember and it usually costs them maybe 1-2 wrestlers per Fed. His purpose for teaming is wildly more noble and the cost to do so is significantly less. It's not the same, but if that's where people want to get hung up on this debate, then so be it.

Moving along, I'm a little thrown by Jeff Manning suddenly having such a big issue with our roster size or how many multi-man teams I run.

With regards to stable roster size, 2024 was the only year in the past - what, 15 or 20 years that any sort of parity existed with stable roster sizes at the top of the charts. That year CURE, SOS, and EDGE all were within spitting range of each other (EDGE won the points race). The following year, SOS had the largest roster and was the one who broke the 1,000 wrestler barrier. They would have continued running well-over 1,000, too, had it not been for Duvall's abrupt retirement. Nobody talked about that, though, even though the disparity definitely existed. But, now that Æ has hit the same roster levels that SOS was sporting for a bit last year, it's suddenly a problem? I don't think so.

The second thing that he talked about was his lack of respect for how many multi-man teams I run. In general, I have no problem with somebody else making that assessment - provided that it's not coming from a place of utter hypocrisy.

I wonder if Jeff thinks that I run more teams than all his buddies? Should we compare the number of teams that I'm on against the likes of everyone else that consistently hits multis? Should we compare my numbers against the likes of some of his stablemates like Solomon Shaw, Derek Tuttle, or even Mike Cook? Should we compare against the members of his buddy alliance - guys like Rich Reilly or Caleb Crowdad? Hear me out.... I'm not putting those names out there to throw any shade at the number of teams they run. If I had to guess, we're all probably running similar (except I often hit mine earlier and require less for the entire cycle). My only problem with what they do is the aforementioned lack of respect for stable boundary lines. The reason it's relevant here to this particular portion of my thoughts is because I've never once seen Jeff call out any of these guys. They all get a pat on the back while I, conversely, have earned his criticism. Interesting how that works, isn't it?

The final person on my list of thoughts is Caleb Crowdad. Mostly what I want to say about him is.... LOL. This guy cries about how trash talk on the boards is immature, but he's also one of the guys that dumped on Matt Yunick repeatedly and, more recently, was part of ganging up on Bill Walkowitz. This guy's also talking about how dumb he thinks manager-based trash talk is (in leagues that exist exclusively for IWA Report opportunities, mind you), but he's also the same guy that was ready to take a trip into Chi-town to actually fight another player.

In addition to coming across as a hypocrite, Caleb has also shown that he doesn't have a good grasp on the game inside the game that's existed for decades - likely because he's never been an actual major player on his own. He's only ever ridden on the coattails of his teammates (which is clearly why he's so threatened by interstable teaming getting called out). So, here's a free lesson from me to Mr. Crowdad..... if you're gonna try running with the big dogs, then you're gonna need a certain level of grit to make it out in one piece.

Well, that's about all I've got for now. That does remind me that I need to make myself more available to other IWA players for my advice - I doubt they would take it, though - me being the man they love to hate and whatnot. At least I have you, my Dear Arrogant Diary. Thanks for always listening.
