Bob Starr storms into the office, still in his gear, running a hand through his hair.

“Medved, I gotta ask—how is that guy getting pushed to the moon?” he snaps. “Subpar Machine? The guy looks like he got lost on the way to a golf tournament and wandered into a six-man title match!”

Professor Vitali Medved doesn’t look up at first. He flips a page on a clipboard, nodding to himself.

“Push is efficient allocation of resources,” he says calmly. “Subpar Machine has excellent upside in current meta.”

Starr stares at him. “...What does that even mean?”

Medved looks up, suddenly enthusiastic. “But do not worry! I can buy you a match deal to compensate. Very fair. Very balanced.”

“A what?”

“UCW has bottom thirty deal,” Medved continues, waving his hand. “Good volume. Low expectations. And—this is key—free battle royal entry.”

Starr blinks.

“Medved... I don’t know what you’re talking about. I’m talking about my career.”

“Yes! Career optimization!” Medved says, pleased.

Before Starr can respond, the door creaks open and Byambasuren Biligbataar steps in, enormous and calm. In his giant hands, he holds a Machine mask and a Maquina mask.

In a thick Mongolian accent, he asks, “I am hearing... new Unknown Wrestler League. I can be in this, yes?”

Medved doesn’t even turn. “All six of you can,” he says dismissively.

Starr looks from one to the other, completely lost.

“...Can I retire yet?”

The camera cuts to black.

A low hum fills the arena... not music, not quite silence either. Something in between. Something unsettling.

Then—

Heavy boots.

One step.

Two steps.

Out from the entrance walks a weathered, stone-faced man. Broad shoulders. Thick beard. Eyes that have seen too much and forgotten nothing.

Vladimir Tosimov.

Behind him... three figures.

Still. Silent. Masked.

Anarchy. Riot. Terror.

They do not play to the crowd. They do not look around. They simply stand.

Tosimov steps forward. Slowly raises a microphone.

A long pause.

When he speaks, his voice is gravel dragged across steel.

"For years... you have watched children play war in this ring." He looks around the arena with visible disdain.

"Bright lights. Big smiles. Championships passed around like party favors."

A slight shake of his head.

"You call this... competition?"

He gestures behind him without turning.

"These are not performers."

"These are not entertainers."

"These... are Assassins."

The three behind him remain motionless. Breathing. Waiting.

"From the Glasseaters Gym in Toledo, Ohio... we do not train for applause."

"We train for one purpose."

He leans slightly into the camera.

"Erasure."

A murmur runs through the crowd.

"The Jade Federation..."

He almost smiles.

"...has grown comfortable."

"Executives at Wrestling With Friends... they build their kingdoms, they shake their hands, they celebrate their stars..."

His tone hardens.

"And they forget... what happens when something better is coming."

He turns now, just slightly, gesturing again to the three figures.

"Anarchy."

A step forward.

"Riot."

Another step.

"Terror."

The final step. The three now loom just behind him.

"They are the beginning."

A beat.

"Not the end."

He lowers the mic for a moment, letting that settle.

Then raises it again.

"UCW... you were always part of the plan."

"A critical piece."

"A foundation that has been... tactically overlooked."

His eyes narrow.

"That oversight... ends now."

A long pause. The air feels heavy.

"Phase One... has begun."

He lowers the microphone.

The three Assassins step forward in unison.
No music. No taunt. No wasted motion.
Just presence.
The camera lingers for one final moment—
Four figures.
One message.
Cut to black.

—Arena goes pitch black. A distorted train horn BLASTS through the speakers. Lights flicker in long, horizontal streaks like something racing past at impossible speed.

—Then a voice. Calm. Mechanical. Smug.

Hello.

I am Blaine.

And I am...

painfully bored.

—A low metallic hum builds—

You see, I've traveled farther than any of you could comprehend.

Faster than your thoughts...

Faster than your reflexes...

Faster than your hopes of surviving what comes next.

And yet...

Here I am.

Stuck.

With you.

—Pause. A faint digital glitch crackles—

So let's play a game.

You step into this ring thinking it's a contest.

Thinking it's strength versus strength... will versus will...

But you're wrong.

This is a riddle.

And the answer?

Is how long you last before I decide you're no longer interesting.

Because I don't get tired.

I don't feel pain.

And I don't make mistakes.

But I do...

Get bored.

And when I get bored?

Things tend to...

end suddenly.

—Lights streak again like a train flying by—

So go ahead.

Run at me.

Swing at me.

Scream for the crowd.

Entertain me.

Because the moment you stop being interesting...

The moment your struggle becomes predictable...

The moment I solve you?

—Voice drops, cold and final—

The ride ends.

—Train horn BLASTS again—

And there are no survivors when Blaine reaches his destination.
