

“I feel like a number...”

— Every UWL wrestler ever

The Unknown Wrestler League is back and looking for its next champion! Could it be you? (Yes, actually, it could be you.)

Every wrestler in this unique league is masked and given a name like “Masked Wrestler #9,” so you’ll only know which are under contract to you by their ID numbers. You won’t have any clue who the rest belong to! Is the jerk who just took away your title managed by one of your friends? Your biggest rival? You won’t find out until they’re unmasked. Think that sounds like fun? If you answered yes, then you’re right!

We’ll give you a list of your wrestler’s ID numbers with the first bulletin. It’s very important that you keep the list secret so no one can target you for elimination: the bottom five non-jobbers in the rankings are unmasked and booted from the league every cycle, but the League Champion can choose to have an additional wrestler kicked out, and you wouldn’t want it to be one of yours, would you? No, of course you wouldn’t!

Athletes must continue wrestling in their original leagues at the same time as in the UWL, because the UWL is more of a lengthy contest than a regular league. Only the strategies in their “real” leagues will qualify for major title play-offs, but your UWL wrestler’s strategy can be worth an engraved championship belt and 25 free matches if they win the League Championship in cycle #25! That’s when the rest of the masks come off and everyone starts asking us when the next iteration is going to begin so they can do it all again.

Besides the masks, the eliminations, and that sweet prize, other aspects that set the UWL apart are that the battle royal winner receives a free League title shot the following cycle, and when wrestlers are eliminated, their wins (but not losses or draws), i-cash, and stars are added to the stats in their original leagues! Yeah, this special league is pretty awesome.

It wouldn’t make much sense to have every ring warrior wear a mask and then basically advertise their identities by listing things like their real win-loss records and earnings in the bulletins, so they all start out as fresh as daisies here. Likewise, tag-team and six-man matches are not allowed because they could give away which wrestlers belong to the same manager. You can submit trash talk if you wish, but choose your words carefully to avoid providing a future League Champion with the clue they need to send your wrestlers packing.

Ready to sign up? Great! Choose up to six wrestlers and neatly print the requested information on the form below. You can use the other side of the page if you need more room, or use a blank sheet of paper, or even email the info to us. Don’t forget to include the $1 fee for each wrestler. They’ll be entered into the battle royal the first cycle and given a match against a random jobber. You can have them challenge additional random jobbers at the usual prices if you want to help them stay out of the bottom five right from the start. And when is that start? It’s Thursday, April 16th, so make sure your completed form reaches our inbox by that morning!

This time around, the UWL will be using the Steel Federation hold values. If you miss the deadline, you’ll have to wait more than 25 cycles for the next opportunity to experience the excitement this special league has to offer, so don’t miss it!
